Inscriptions on Them Show Their

Great Age. Assuming it to be historically correct, as stated in the text books, that the Chiese used cannon eighty years before the hristian era, the two brass field pieces ented to Canada by the commander British forces at Tientsin, and now ying at the drill hall on Cartier Square evolution of over 1,500 years of struction being contemporaneous with first authenticated use of cannon in that Edward III used leather can n his campaign against the Scots in 1327, hat twenty years later guns of from bars hosped together hurled stones against the fortress of Caiais, and that the Turks employed similar ordnance in the Turks employed similar ordnames in the sieges of Constantinopie in 1294 and 1453, the use of genuine cast metal can-non with spherical projectics is of con-siderably later date.

For all their antiquity, however, these Chipese culvarius, in a way, form com-panion pieces to the two cannon captured at the Crimea, which are now mounted on Parliament Hill, since as arms of "pre-cision" they are in the same class, being cast metal ordunace of smooth bore; at-beit, these Chinese guns are nearly 400 years older than the Russian. And yet doubtless the Chinese pieces served by Boxel artillerists did service last year against the invading arms of Europe during the attack of Teartsin.

haring the attack of Tientsin.

There is no doubt shout the age of these Chinese guns. The full particular of their inpeption are recorded on the metal sides with as much attention intail as if they were the authorized projects and their interest of the contract of the metal sides with as much attention to detail as if they were the authorized productions of a modern raunicipal council. They bear, besides the dates of their manufacture, the name of the sovereign in whose reign they were produced, the name and title of the provincial Governor, the imprint of the gunmaker, and even the name of the manufacturer of the gun carriage. The characters cast on the first gun may be thus rendered in English. "Gun No. 12. The Emperor Au Kong, March 1, 1429. Gun name—Lunky Irresistible; weight (force), 700 pounds; powder charge, 33, pounds; ball, 21s, pounds. Then follow the name and title of the Governor to the length of a month's laundry biff, and the names of the "maker of the gun carriage," in duly less degree.

The second piece is described as "Gun N.s. 183, bears also the name of the Emperor Au Kong, and is dated "ist June, 183." The names of the manufacturer of the gun and the maker of the gun carriage are the same as those on the first guit, but the name of the provincial Governor is different, showing that they had their political ups and downs in China even 561 years ago.

Even in the folicy of naming guns the Chinaman would seem to be able to claim their political ups and downs in China even 56 years ago.

Even in the folicy of naming guns the Chinaman would seem to be able to claim priority of invention. It may be anomalous to apply so high-sounding a title as 'irresistible' to a 25-pounder, but it doubliess represented in its day the acme of destructive power as much as did the boasted battery of the French monarch who named his guns after the twelve Aposites, or, for the matter of that, the homemade cannon, 'Long Cecil.' that kept the Boers at bay in Kimberley.—Ottawa Citizen.
